About the role

We are hiring a Senior Manager for Marketing Design to own the quality of what goes out. You will set the standard for how Airtel is expressed across marketing, from a launch film to a push notification, and lead the designers and partners who make it. This is a craft-first role. Your time goes into ideas, art direction and the work itself, not into moving deliverables through a queue.

What you'll do

- Own the creative and visual quality bar for marketing design, and hold it when the timeline argues otherwise.
- Art-direct Airtel's biggest moments, from brand campaigns and product launches to sponsorships, from first idea to final frame.
- Turn dense propositions across pricing, network and bundled services into visual ideas that land in one pass.
- Build the system underneath the work: design languages, kits and templates that let many teams ship on-brand without routing every file through you.
- Work across brand, growth, product and marketing so the experience holds together on every surface a customer touches.
- Lead and mentor designers. Hire well, give specific feedback, and build judgement rather than output.
- Brief and steer agencies and production partners where we use them, then hold them to the standard you set.
- Use performance data and creative experiments to sharpen the next round instead of guessing at it.
- Put AI, motion and emerging tools to work where they genuinely raise quality or buy back time.

What we're looking for

- Eight or more years in design, in-house or agency, with work you would still put in front of people today.
- Exceptional craft in type, composition, colour and motion. You see the half-pixel, and you know when it does not matter.
- Conceptual strength. You start from an idea rather than a layout, and you can defend it without a deck.
- Range across digital, social, CRM, product surfaces, retail, OOH and video, with a view on what each medium actually needs.
- Experience managing designers, and the ability to hold your position with senior stakeholders through reasoning rather than volume.

- Comfort switching between brand work built to last years and performance work that ships this week, without dropping the bar on either.
- A portfolio that shows thinking, not only finished frames.

Airtel is an equal opportunity employer.
